The complex and difficult negotiations in which India played an active role, were concluded in the Conference on Disarmament after 12 years, in September 1992. The UN General Assembly (UNGA) adopted it by consensus and India cosponsored the resolution in the UNGA. At the signing ceremony in Paris (13-15 January 1993), 130 countries joined the CWC as original signatories. The Convention comes into force 180 days after the date of deposit of the 65th Instrument of Ratification, but in no case earlier than two years after its opening for signature. The CWC is a multilaterally negotiated disarmament agreement which is universally applicable, comprehensive in scope and non-discriminatory in character with a stringent international verification regime.
